Decode a tough passage

Next time you're stuck on a dense passage, take a picture and try this chat:

"Ah, sad and old!

Trouble and pain you've borne, and bear, aplenty.
Only a great will could have brought you here
among the Akhaian ships, and here alone
before the eyes of one who stripped your sons, your many sons, in battle. Iron must be the heart within you. Come, then, and sit down.
We'll probe our wounds no more but let them rest,
though grief lies heavy on us. Tears heal nothing, drying so stiff and cold. This is the way
the gods ordained the destiny of men, to bear such burdens in our lives, while they feel no affliction. At the door of Zeus are those two urns of good and evil gifts that he may choose for us; and one for whom the lightning's joyous king dips in both urns will have by turns bad luck and good. But one to whom he sends all evil—that man goes contemptible by the will of Zeus; ravenous hunger drives him over the wondrous earth,
unresting, without honor from gods or men.
Mixed fortune came to Peleus. Shining gifts
at the gods' hands he had from birth: felicity, wealth overflowing, rule of the Myrmidons,
a bride immortal at his mortal side.
But then Zeus gave afflictions too—no family
of powerful sons grew up for him at home,
but one child, of all seasons and of none.
Can I stand by him in his age? Far from my country
I sit at Troy to grieve you and your children.
You, too, sir, in time past were fortunate,
we hear men say. From Makar's isle of Lesbos northward, and south of Phrygia and the Straits,
no one had wealth like yours, or sons like yours.
Then gods out of the sky sent you this bitterness:
the years of siege, the battles and the losses.
Endure it, then. And do not mourn forever for your dead son. There is no remedy.
You will not make him stand again. Rather await some new misfortune to be suffered."

This passage is from The Iliad, where Achilles is speaking to Priam, the king of Troy, who has come to ask for the body of his son, Hector. Here's a simpler version of what Achilles is saying:

"You've been through so much pain and suffering, and you're still strong. It must have taken incredible courage to come here, alone, in front of the man who killed so many of your sons. You must have a heart of iron. Now, sit down. Let's not dwell on our pain.  Crying won't change

Break down a project

Beat procrastination by breaking down a project into the smallest steps possible. Try this chat:

I need to write my final paper on symbolism and themes in Gabriel García Márquez's One Hundred Years of Solitude. Give me a step-by-step guide to help me. Make the steps as small and achievable as possible.

Here's a step-by-step guide to help you tackle your paper efficiently:

Step 1: Read or Review the Novel

1. Skim your notes or past assignments to refresh your memory.
2. Reread the introduction and conclusion of the novel for overarching themes.
3. Identify 2-3 key moments in the plot that stand out as symbolic.

Step 2: Identify Key Symbols and Themes

4. List every symbol you can recall (e.g., butterflies, mirrors, rain).
5. List major themes (e.g., solitude, memory, family legacy).
6. Highlight connections between specific symbols and themes.

Sure, I'd love to help with that! So, can you tell me what the main purpose of the pyramids was in ancient Egyptian society?

"Okay, I think that the pyramids were primarily built as tombs for Egyptian pharaohs, like they were these giant monuments to honor them and maybe even help them in the afterlife."

00:17

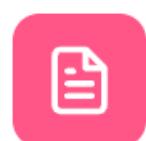

That's right! The pyramids were indeed built as tombs for pharaohs. Now, can you explain why the Great Pyramid of Giza is considered one of the Seven Wonders of the Ancient World?

"I think the Great Pyramid of Giza is considered one of the seven wonders of the ancient world, mainly because it was an incredible ↓ t of engineering for its time. Like, it's huge and it was built with Here's a game concept based on your case studies, designed like a Storyboard-style strategy game to help you understand the consequences of different choices.

Diplomatic Dilemmas: A Strategy Game

A decision-based interactive game where you play as the President of the United States, managing global crises through 🤝 diplomatic, 💰 economic, and 🎖️ military strategies.

How It Works:

- Each player (or just you, if playing solo) takes on the role of the President or a National Security Council (NSC) advisor.
- Players face real-world crisis scenarios from your case studies.

 - Players select policies, which then impact global relations,
